To make a release, I usually create a batch file that executes a, which creates everything that's necessary to make a release.. IMO creating a ZIP file belongs into that MSBuild project file as well Go to the properties of your project and in the 'Build Events' tab write your commands in the Post-Build event area.. Into my actual project Because when I put it there, it gets executed each time I'm building the project in Visual Studio, for example when I'm debugging.. It has nothing to do Usually I don't put stuff like creating zip files, installers, NuGet packages etc.

How do I make a zip file for Microsoft Visual Studio 2013 for C++? I have 3 files: a header file,.. But zip files, installers etc Are only needed when I do a release, so I don't want to wait for them to be re-generated each time I press F5 in Visual Studio.. For example, I work with MySQL often and for that I need MySql data dll referenced every time. Microsoft Office 2004 Download Mac
